

RETIREMENT – STEPPING OFF....

With the sale of your business behind you, you are ready to step off into the next phase of your life.....make sure you have something attractive to step over to.

'Retirement' is a dirty word, as it suggests you have nothing further of value to offer anyone. So don't go there! There are more constructive alternatives.

The sale of your business presents the most exciting time for many people who have been working in business for the majority of their lives.

The most constructive and positive way to approach this time of transition is to see it as an opportunity to change from process work to a series of interesting and worthwhile goal-driven projects. You should now have the time and financial and organisational resources to succeed in a variety of projects, hobbies and interests. Helping others is often more rewarding than just helping yourself.

Make sure you have lots of fun as well! Many people have worked for so long they no longer know how to relax and have fun. You may need help here, preferably from those who have made an art-form of enjoying themselves!
